

Assistant/Associate Professor in Operations and Technology Management at Cambridge Judge Business School

The Operations and Technology Management (OTM) group of Cambridge Judge Business School (CJBS) seeks to fill a position at the rank of either an Assistant Professor (preferably with experience) or an Associate Professor.

The Cambridge Judge Business School is a highly ranked business school, located at the heart of an 800-year-old University and within one of the most active entrepreneurship clusters in Europe. The OTM group at CJBS is collegial and ambitious. The OTM group has a reputation for management research that is rigorous, original and consequential, as evidenced by a strong publication record, high profile media coverage, the placements of its PhD program, and the senior editorial roles of its members.

The group continuously seeks to increase its global visibility and impact through recognized research excellence, as well as by placing its PhD graduates in academic positions in leading schools. We are very supportive of research with real-world impact and are particularly welcoming of candidates unafraid to tackle topics in organizations and society more widely. The members of the group are actively pursuing research topics that inform their teaching, and, in turn, our research priorities often reflect problems and perspectives identified through executive teaching.

Depending on their level of seniority, the ideal candidates will provide evidence of a record of impactful research, either through a strong working paper pipeline, with papers in advanced stages of the publication process, or by publications that showcase outstanding research productivity and excellence. Research on artificial intelligence, machine learning and business analytics would appeal to the group's current research and teaching engagements and aspirations. Other indicative topics of interest include (but are not limited to) healthcare operations, innovation, product development & entrepreneurship, and project management. As CJBS is predominantly a graduate business school, candidates will be expected to offer evidence of excellent teaching experience on degree programs (e.g., MBA; Executive MBA) and the ambition, if not the experience, to engage in Executive Education – where the OTM group contributes a lot of teaching.

Depending on the experience of the successful candidate and subject to final approval of the position by the University Committee, the appointment will be made at the Associate Professor, or Assistant Professor level, and is anticipated to start on 1 September 2026 or as soon as possible thereafter.

We offer a competitive package of benefits and salary.

This vacancy will soon be advertised on the University of Cambridge job opportunities website: <http://www.jobs.cam.ac.uk/job/>. In the meantime expressions of interest can be discussed further with the OTM group head (Professor Stelios Kavadias) at s.kavadias@jbs.cam.ac.uk. Professor Kavadias and a few other members of the group will attend the upcoming INFORMS Annual Meeting in Atlanta, GA, where they will be available for informal meetings regarding the position.
